Hi again

It has belatedly occurred to me that i haven't told you and the others that Alice slipped away in August after her 10 year long bout with Alzheimers. At a certain point, life with that disease is no longer worth living, and that point came long ago for her, so her passing in August was an anti climax. We had an appropriate good bye to her ashes from me and our kids at a high point overlooking the Rio Grande valley from a spot we had visited a number of times, and which was an Anasazi site of great beauty. It was also appropriate because of her long work with the Smithsonian and their American Indian collections.
